

UMBC Faculty-Led

Child Developmental Psychology in Granada, Spain

May 25, 2020 - June 22, 2020

Program Details

- This program explores how humans develop from the prenatal period up until puberty and how local context can affect this development.
- Granada's history, food, architecture, etc. reflect a rich intersection of Catholic Spain, the Islamic Moors (who ruled there from 711-1492), and Jewish (who ruled in the 11th century) cultures. This culturally diverse town provides a fantastic opportunity to talk with students about culture and cultural influences on families and children.
- Receive 4-credits on the program: 3-credits for PSYC200 and 1-credit for PSYC398: an Applied Psychology Internship

Costs & Financial Aid

- Program fee: $4,400 includes tuition, accommodations, program excursions, some group meals
- Not included in program fee: airfare, passport fees, personal expenses
- Visit the Financial Aid and Scholarships Office to find out how your aid can be applied to this program

Application Information

- Application deadline: February 15, 2020
- Applicants must complete Study Abroad 101 and an advising appointment through Education Abroad prior to application deadline
- Questions? Email educationabroad@umbc.edu

Faculty Director

Dr. David Schultz is an associate professor in the Department of Psychology and a clinical child psychologist. His work focuses on how families and schools impact the social and emotional development of infants and young children. He is Assistant Director of the UMBC Home Visiting Training Center, a center that teaches professionals effective ways to interact with pregnant mothers and mothers of young children.

301 Administration Building
410-455-8175
educationabroad@umbc.edu

 @UMBCEducationAbroad
 @UMBCStudyAbroad
 @umbceducationabroad
 myUMBC: Education Abroad

