

Keturah Elisabeth Whitehurst, Ph.D.

1912 - 2000

Ph.D. Developmental and Experimental Psychology, 1952
Harvard University

Prior to receiving her PhD from what is now known as Harvard University in 1952, Dr. Keturah Elisabeth Whitehurst worked as the head of the English Department at Albany State College in Georgia. She was the first African-American woman to intern at Harvard's Psychological Clinic. She then joined Virginia State College's faculty. Dr. Whitehurst took a position at the University of Nashville, where she taught psychology and established the Fisk Children's School. She also published research on cultural factors that influence the development of African-American children.