CHARISSA S. L. CHEAH, Ph.D. is a Professor in the Department of Psychology and Asian Studies Faculty Affiliate at the University of Maryland, Baltimore County. As a cultural developmental scientist, Dr. Cheah utilizes mixed-method approaches to explore how individual characteristics, relationships, socialization agents, and contexts interact to influence social-emotional, mental, and physical health. She is particularly interested in understanding these processes among families of Asian heritage and Muslim religious backgrounds, considering their ethnic-racial/religious minoritized, immigrant, and marginalized intersecting statuses across different countries.

Dr. Cheah is the President of the Society for Research on Adolescence. She is also a Fellow of the American Psychological Association, the Association for Psychological Science, and the International Society for the Study of Behavioral Development. Dr. Cheah is a recipient of numerous fellowships, including a Fulbright Research Fellowship to Italy, a Young Scholar Award from the Foundation for Child Development's Changing Faces of America's Children program, and a Visiting Scientist Fellowship from the Scientific and Technological Research Council of Turkey. Her past contributions to her profession include serving as Chair of the Society for Research in Child Development (SRCD) Asian Caucus and Co-Chair of the SRCD International Affairs Committee, and in editorial roles such as Associate Editor for the journal Child Development, and editorial board member of The International Journal of Behavioral Development and Parenting: Science and Practice.

Dr. Cheah's research has been funded by federal agencies and private foundations, including the National Institutes of Health (NIH), the National Science Foundation (NSF), the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC), and the Russell Sage Foundation (RSF). She is the recipient of a University System of Maryland Board of Regents Faculty Award for Excellence in Scholarship or Research. Dr. Cheah regularly serves as a child development, parenting, and diversity, equity, and inclusivity and consultant for children's media and lends her expertise as a commentator and advisory board member for public media, foundations, and private corporations.
